

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

October 29, 2007

I send greetings to those observing Lung Cancer Awareness Month.

Our Nation is dedicated to finding a cure for lung cancer, and we continue to make advancements in the detection and treatment of this type of cancer. Americans can reduce their risk of getting lung cancer by taking necessary precautions such as eating well, scheduling regular physicals, and avoiding tobacco and other harmful substances. Lung Cancer Awareness Month is an opportunity to underscore our commitment to battling this deadly disease and raising awareness of its impact on our citizens.

I appreciate Lung Cancer Alliance members and all those who help improve our knowledge of cancer and bring hope to those suffering from this disease. I also commend lung cancer survivors for their strength, courage, and determination. Our country will continue the fight against lung cancer until it is won.

Laura and I send our best wishes.
